Exifer is a powerful Windows tool designed to help you manage EXIF information for any JPG or TIFF picture stored on your local disks. You may find the program a little bit too difficult to use at the first glance, mostly thanks to its multi-panel interface that was initially supposed to make everything a bit easier. While some people could think that it's a bit cluttered, the main window is actually divided into multiple panels, each with its very own purpose, so you can browse a folder, preview a photo and change EXIF data straight from the main window. The program supports EXIF up to 2.2 and only the two aforementioned image formats, while also comprising advanced tools to back up and restore metadata for any photo on your computer. Plus, you can also export and import EXIF information from and to a file, with Exifer boasts basic editing features, such as rotation and watermarking. Last but not least, the application also incorporates a slideshow utility that helps you easily view the images in a defined folder, offering several customization options in the settings menu. And speaking on setting Exifer up, the configuration screen comes with multiple parameters concerning the backup and the thumbnail tools, shortcuts and online update, so make sure you have a look in here as well. Exifer works like a charm regardless of the Windows version installed on the local machine, running on low resources and without asking for administrator privileges on Windows 7. All in all, Exifer is clearly a handy piece of software, but a more user-friendly interface could be a great improvement. The layout seems a bit too complicated, so beginners might need a few minutes to figure out how to use the program. It is a play which explores the idea of resistance in the face of oppression, and it encourages the audience to challenge the politicians in power, and seek change by the only method left to us- education. This theme is an important one for me as I have faced the coldness of government, the education system and the education establishment this year alone. It seems that in light of the global economic crisis, cuts have become the norm. The government have even announced a further £10billion in cuts this year, to March 2012. Amongst these cuts, schools will be hit hardest. Those looking to challenge the cuts will have to find a source of resilience in a way they have not had to in recent years, and that is something to be proud of. Of course, schools should be a safe place for children, but the government has made it clear that this will not be the case. They say that schools will survive the cuts, and that they will need to take drastic measures but mainly have to rely on people who are passionate about education to help. There are many people that are saying that this cuts will make a 'disastrous impact on education'. This would
