Raloxifene-related venous thromboembolism in cancer patients. To identify the potential risk of raloxifene use in the prevention or treatment of venous thromboembolism in cancer patients. A retrospective cohort study was conducted among Medicare Advantage beneficiaries enrolled in the health maintenance organization and using a comprehensive chemotherapy plan. Patients who filled at least one prescription for raloxifene from the index date to the end of the study period (end of 2010) were included (n = 26,141). Controls were matched based on age, sex, index date, and raloxifene use. The primary outcome of interest was a diagnosis of a new venous thromboembolism (VTE) event. The index date for the raloxifene-exposed cohort was the date of the first prescription for raloxifene. An average daily dose of raloxifene was calculated for each patient. A conditional logistic regression analysis was used to estimate the odds ratios (ORs) and 95% confidence intervals (CIs) of VTE in the raloxifene-exposed and non-exposed cohorts. The rate of a new VTE was 1.6-fold higher among raloxifene-exposed patients than non-exposed patients (OR = 1.62, 95% CI = 1.44, 1.81). Current tobacco use (OR = 2.15, 95% CI = 1.61, 2.89) and prior VTE (OR = 4.42, 95% CI = 3.54, 5.50) were significantly associated with the risk of VTE. There was no association between raloxifene use and VTE risk among patients without a history of tobacco use (OR = 1.09, 95% CI = 0.97, 1.23) or prior VTE (OR = 1.25, 95% CI = 0.81, 1.94). Raloxifene use was associated with a 1.6-fold increased risk of VTE in cancer patients. There was a lack of association between raloxifene use and VTE risk among patients without a history of tobacco use or prior VTE. Physicians should discuss the potential risks associated with raloxifene use with their patients and prescribe raloxifene cautiously in high-risk patients.Q: Using three different pixel sizes in
