A look at the coming total solar eclipse from sunspot AR 1698. The solar eclipse of August 29, 2017, was perhaps the most beautiful and impressive. At that time, the sun and moon were aligned such that the disk of the moon was about 4400 kilometers across and one-third of the moon was covered by the sun. In addition, the fully eclipsed part of the sun's disk, lying between the moon and the observer, was about 10% longer than the disk observed in a total solar eclipse. A model of the sunspot AR 1698 with the occulting part of the Moon drawn in to show the size of the unlit part of the Sun's disk and the size of the Moon as compared to the sunspot. The unlit portion of the Sun's disk extended to a radius of about 1130 kilometers. At 08:49:00 UT that day, the magnitude-7.9 sunspot AR 1698 was in longitude 237, latitude Â°43â°41, and was beginning to rotate in longitude toward the sun. A model of AR 1698 shown at the same time (Aug. 29, 2017, 08:49 UT). In this view, the moon had reached its maximum angular width (about 4400 kilometers) and about one-third of the moon's edge had been covered by the sun. At 08:50:08 UT, on the southeast limb (far left in the image) of AR 1698, the sunspot was motionless but suddenly (a little over 5 minutes later, at 08 e79caf774b
